Stars and Identity – Exploring Self Through Astrology

Abstract:

In recent years, global events such as COVID-19, wars and technological advances have dramatically changed people's lives, which has increased their uncertainty about the future. This has led to a resurgence in the popularity of astrology, especially among the younger generation, as many people seek psychological comfort and guidance through astrology. Throughout history, astrology has influenced social and technological progress through its global trade spread. It is worth noting that changes in Pluto's position usually coincide with major societal changes, and its move from Capricorn to Aquarius signalled a shift from materialism to technological and spiritual growth.

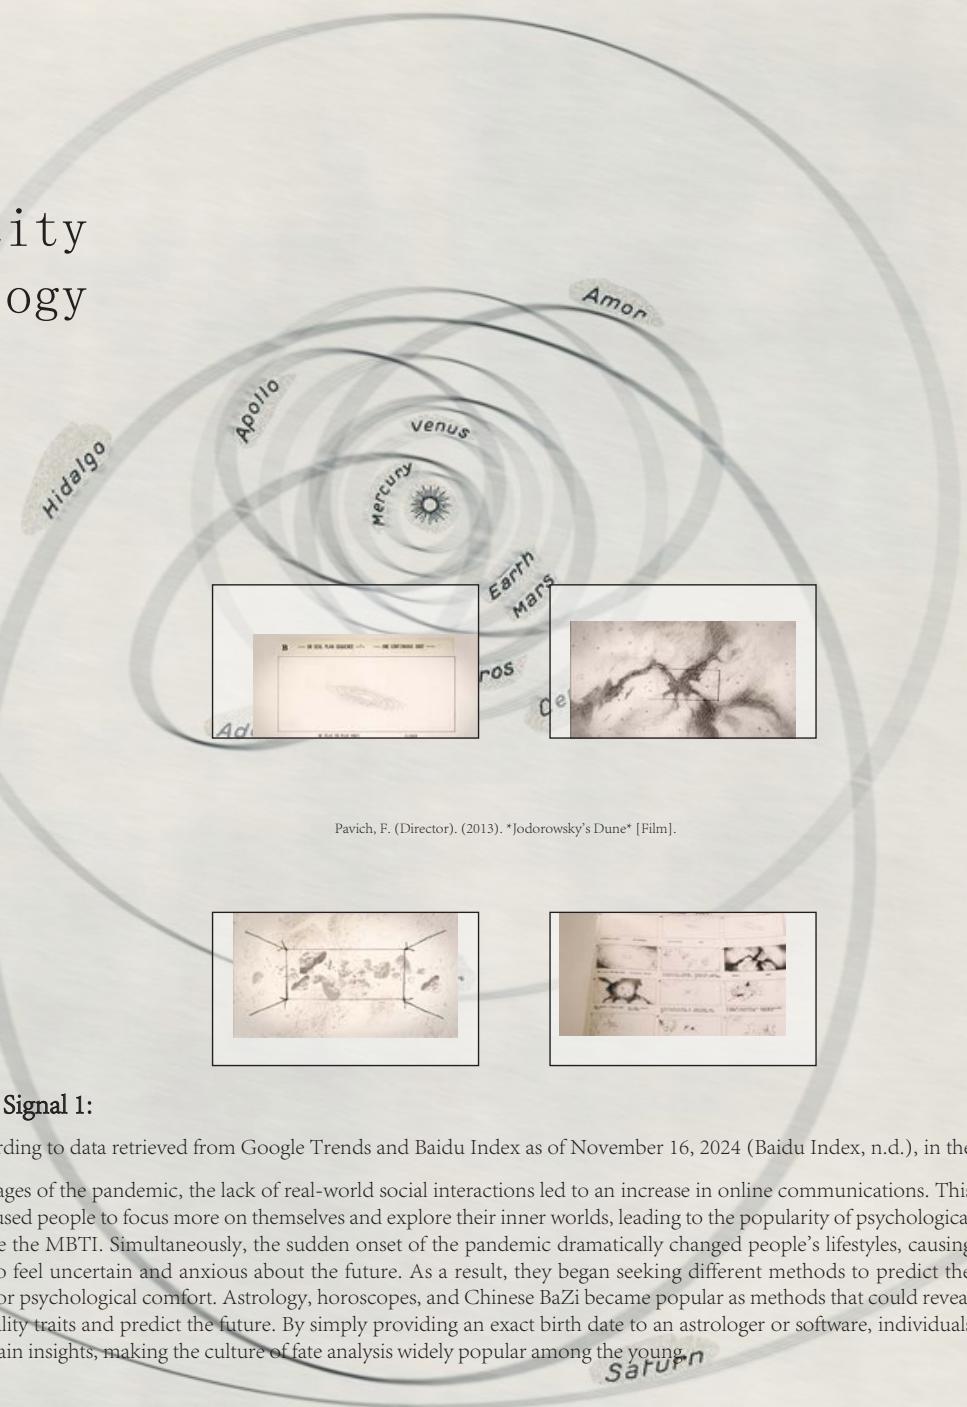

I want to explore how astrology can help individuals explore and affirm their identities. Through my experience and practice as an astrologer, I've found astrology to be a powerful tool for understanding and interpreting one's inner essence. I have chosen to combine this theme with astrology to explore how people in modern society pursue and reflect on the fundamental question of

Weak Signal 1:

According to data retrieved from Google Trends and Baidu Index as of November 16, 2024 (Baidu Index, n.d.), in the latter stages of the pandemic, the lack of real-world social interactions led to an increase in online communications. This shift caused people to focus more on themselves and explore their inner worlds, leading to the popularity of psychological tests like the MBTI. Simultaneously, the sudden onset of the pandemic dramatically changed people's lifestyles, causing many to feel uncertain and anxious about the future. As a result, they began seeking different methods to predict the future for psychological comfort. Astrology, horoscopes, and Chinese BaZi became popular as methods that could reveal personality traits and predict the future. By simply providing an exact birth date to an astrologer or software, individuals could gain insights, making the culture of fate analysis widely popular among the young

Weak Signal 2:

At the same time, many people feel that their personalities are complex and multifaceted, displaying different personas in various social situations. Many have consulted their astrological signs only to find that their actual personalities do not match the descriptions of their zodiac signs. This discrepancy often arises because people consider only their Sun sign, determined by their birth date.

However, from the perspective of modern Western psychological astrology, a person's personality is typically determined by three signs. The Sun sign represents one's ideal self, which is most apparent during childhood and manifests in interactions with friends. As individuals grow into their 20s and 30s, they gradually develop another persona to adapt to societal expectations, often referred to in astrology as the "social mask."

This mask is a kind of guise people adopt in social interactions, reflecting the first impression strangers have of a person, that is, one's outward style of interaction. Sasportas (1985) notes in his book The Twelve Houses that it acts like a lens through which we become aware of our existence, discover the focus of our lives and understand how to "embrace" the world. Given that we view the world this way, our behavior will naturally align with this perception. Moreover, life also responds according to our expectations, projecting our views back onto ourselves.

Jodorowsky, A. (Director). (1973). "The Holy Mountain" [Film].

Weak Signal 3:

In recent years, our lives have changed dramatically due to COVID-19, wars, AI technology and other factors. My astrology teacher says that these changes are reflected in the astrological chart, which can be used to predict the development of societies and nations.

Of particular importance is the change in Pluto house position, which occurs about once every ten to twenty years and has a profound effect on society. We are in this period: at the end of 2024, Pluto will move from Capricorn into Aquarius, heralding a shift in the collective subconscious.

During Pluto in Capricorn over the past 15 years, the collective subconscious has tended to be materialistic, focusing on power, survival, resource concentration, and issues related to land and property, primarily in the form of large corporations and conglomerates. Upon entering Aquarius, the collective subconscious will shift towards technological advancement and spiritual growth, pursuing the true self rather than external values.

Historically, changes in Pluto's position have always been accompanied by major social and technological changes.

In the West, Pluto's position in Capricorn from 1762 to 1778, the invention of the first spinning machine in Britain, marked the dawn of the steam age and accelerated the exploitation of the Earth's resources, while Pluto's entry into Aquarius from 1778 to 1798, the emancipation of European and North American thought, and the discovery of Uranus broadened the understanding of the boundaries of the solar system.

The spread of astrology and global trade networks:

According to Holden (1996), the history of astrology dates back to ancient Babylon around 2000 B.C., when it was used primarily to predict political and meteorological events. In Ancient Egypt and Greece, astrology was incorporated into philosophical thought. The conquests of Alexander the Great spread Greek culture to Egypt and the Middle East, making the port of Alexandria a center of academic research. Astrology spread further into Europe during the Roman Empire and was preserved and expanded during the Islamic Golden Age through the translations and innovations of Arab scholars. These achievements eventually influenced the science and philosophy of the European Renaissance.

Global trade routes not only facilitated the exchange of goods, but also allowed for the exchange of culture and knowledge such as astrology. In East Asia, especially in China, the spread of astrology can be traced back to the Han Dynasty, when astrology was exchanged with Indian and Central Asian cultures via the Silk Road. Chinese astrology was combined with traditional Chinese astronomy and calendar science to form a unique system of astrology known as Zi Wei Dou Shu. This system was heavily influenced by Taoism and Buddhism and reflects the unique East Asian interpretation and application of astrology.

Nonhuman Astrology and the Environmental Crisis

What is Non-Human Astrology?

While traditional astrology focuses on individual human destiny and personality, "non-human astrology" expands its scope to encompass the entire Earth's ecosystem. In this perspective, not only humans are influenced by celestial bodies, but plants, animals, land, water sources, and even Earth's climate systems are intimately connected to cosmic energy fields. This approach recognizes humans as merely one component within the universal system, rather than its center.

Within the Vedic astrological framework, the universe consists of five fundamental elements:

Earth (Prithvi), Water (Jal), Fire (Agni), Air (Vayu), and Ether (Aakash).

These elements exist not only in human birth charts but flow through every corner of our planet. When these elements maintain balance, human society and the natural environment operate harmoniously. However, today's environmental crises—pollution, deforestation, climate change—are external manifestations of severe elemental imbalance.

Why Non-Human Astrology is Crucial for Solving Environmental Crisis

When we pollute rivers, we are actually disturbing the energy flow of the water element. When we clear forests, we disrupt the natural balance between earth and air elements. When we burn excessive fossil fuels, the fire element becomes overpowering, leading to global warming. From an astrological perspective, this environmental destruction transcends mere physical problems—it represents energetic dysfunction.

As astrologers understand, each person's birth chart carries the energy of these five elements. When external environmental elements fall out of balance, our internal elemental energies also become disturbed. This explains why modern people commonly experience anxiety, depression, and physical discomfort—our inner elements resonate with environmental elements, but this resonance is disharmonious. Therefore, cleaning and restoring the environment serves not only the Earth but also our own healing. When we plant a tree, we are not merely purifying air but also harmonizing our internal elemental energies.

The Deep Connection Between Planets, Astrology, and Environment

Astrology and botany have been natural partners throughout history. Traditional cultures worldwide possess wisdom systems linking plants with celestial movements. The Druid horoscope corresponds different trees with zodiacal cycles; the Celtic Tree Calendar divides time according to tree growth rhythms; India's Vedic system integrates astrology with Vastu Shastra and Ayurvedic medicine. These seemingly different traditions point to the same truth: people, plants, planets, and constellations are composed of identical elements and carry the same energetic qualities.

From an astrological perspective, each plant resonates with specific planetary energies. For example, the Banyan tree corresponds with Saturn's energy, possessing qualities of longevity and stability. When we plant Banyan trees alongside highways, we not only purify air but also alleviate the excessive tension of Saturn's energy in modern fast-paced life. The Peepal tree relates to Jupiter's energy, representing wisdom and spiritual growth. When someone's Jupiter energy is weak or their astrological chart indicates shortened lifespan, planting and tending Peepal trees can help balance these negative influences. climate change — are external manifestations of severe elemental imbalance.

Astrological charts are constructed based on Earth's two fundamental movements: Earth's revolution around the Sun creates seasonal cycles and annual variations in daylight duration; Earth's rotation around its axis controls day-night alternation. These celestial movements influence not only human life rhythms but also profoundly affect plant growth cycles, animal migration patterns, and entire ecosystem operations.

Understanding this synchronization between cosmic rhythms and terrestrial life enables better planning of environmental protection actions. Tree planting during astrologically favorable periods yields more significant results. Collecting rainwater or purifying contaminated land under specific lunar phases and planetary configurations can achieve remarkable efficiency. This represents not superstition but deep understanding and application of natural rhythms.

Earth's Movements and Environmental Significance of Astrological Charts

Non-human astrology provides concrete guidance for environmental restoration. When facing excessive exploitation of earth elements, we can restore balance by planting vegetation that resonates with Earth's energy. When water elements suffer pollution, we can utilize aquatic plants associated with Moon and Neptune energies to purify water sources. When fire elements become overly intense causing global warming, planting trees that can absorb and balance fire energy becomes particularly crucial.

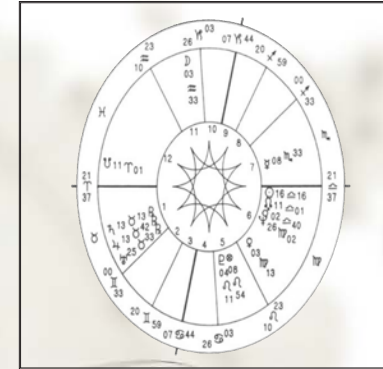

The beauty of this approach lies in its perfect integration of ancient wisdom with modern environmental needs. Rather than passively cleaning pollution or reducing emissions, we actively collaborate with cosmic energies to create a more harmonious planetary environment. Every environmental action becomes spiritual practice; every planted tree becomes a bridge connecting us to the cosmos.

Environmental Astrology in Practice

-worldview

Astrology, an ancient occult-like discipline. In the past, ancient priests used it to observe the stars in the sky to reveal the fate of a nation or society. In the 20th century, some psychologists linked astrology and psychology to form modern psychological astrology, changing the focus of this mysterious discipline from exploring fate to exploring the psyche.

Everyone who has a birth time accurate to the minute can use a birth chart to understand their inner nature and life patterns more clearly, which can reveal their personality traits, underlying needs and tendencies.

According to the Bible, God's great work began with the creation of the universe, which He then divided into different parts. He distinguished between heaven and hell, light and darkness, and day and night. If we try to understand the nature of existence and try to make sense of it, we will find that human beings actually show the same creativity in dividing their lives into different elements and stages. The birth chart is the blueprint of one's existence, reflecting how we divide our lives into zones, and the sum of these zones creates a complete life.

Physically, an astrolabe is a map. It shows where the sun, moon, and planets were in the sky at the time of a person's birth.

By 2025 astrology became officially certified as an authoritative and widely recognized discipline by the general public, and in an age where the majority of people are concerned about their mental health, the government added birth charts to the birth certificates of newborn babies...it's a world where astrology is the authority.

Human beings are part of the "universe" as a whole, a part that is limited in time and space.

-Albert Einstein

-Narrative

In the year 2030, astrology and psychology are mixed together, and natal charts become like a “personality guide” for people and animals. Everyone uses these charts to understand each other better. One day, in London, a stray cat is born in the afternoon, but its birth time is unknown. So, the family that adopts the cat uses the same birth time as a girl born that night.

Starting in 2025, UK government found birth charts very useful for predicting and understanding human personalities. So, they asked every newborn to register their birthdate, and they put the birth chart in their birth certificate

This image shows a baby in a hospital right after birth. The doctor and astrologer are there, registering the baby's birth data and making his or her birth chart

By 2050, food shortages and environmental problems made people look for ways to combine technology and mysticism. The policy expanded to plants and farm animals, using star data to improve conservation and farming. At this time, by using birth charts, people understood animals better and reached a harmonious living together.

This helped the environment, like more green spaces and fewer buildings.

The third image shows a future London city life where different species gather by a pond, like animals by a water source in a grassland. People and animals living together as if it were the most natural thing in the world, and there won't be obvious astrological symbols in it because by 2050, they have become part of life.

As this policy worked well, public interest in the spiritual increases, and urbanization causes a rise in stray animals, making animals a hot topic by 2030, and the policy expanded to animal friends. Families are required to register their animal friends' birthdays with the government.

Modelling

~~The home where the protagonist lives in the story has undergone some changes over the years to become more cat-friendly.~~

In the initial interior renovation design, I created multi-level platforms and aerial pathways based on cats' manifest behaviors (such as climbing and movement patterns).

However, these designs remained rooted in human perspective interpretations—merely satisfying cats' surface behavioral needs while failing to delve deeper into their essential requirements such as spatial security, territorial consciousness, and social needs.

After receiving feedback, I recognized this cognitive limitation and restructured my design logic in subsequent proposals: shifting from 'humans observing cats' to 'cats perceiving the world.'

Initial interior renovation design

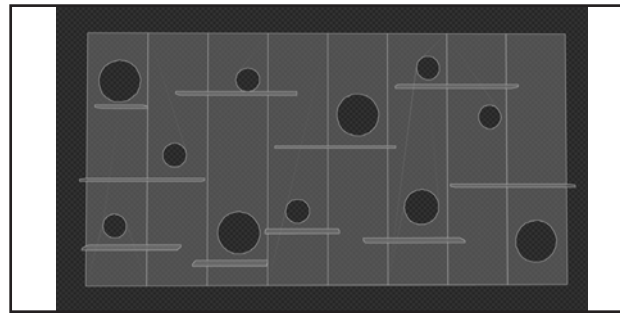

Design from a Feline Perspective

This design transforms a villa from a cat's perspective, based on research into feline habits and behavioral patterns. It involves structural modifications to the villa itself, as well as adjustments to furniture and small devices.

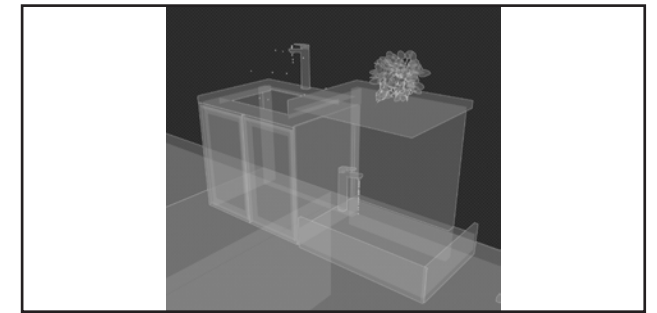

Dual Space Design

I added an extra layer of walkways in each room specifically for cats. From the outside, these look like cabinets with small holes so cats can peek out. This lets cats move freely throughout the house - they can hide inside when they want alone time, or come out when they want to interact with people.

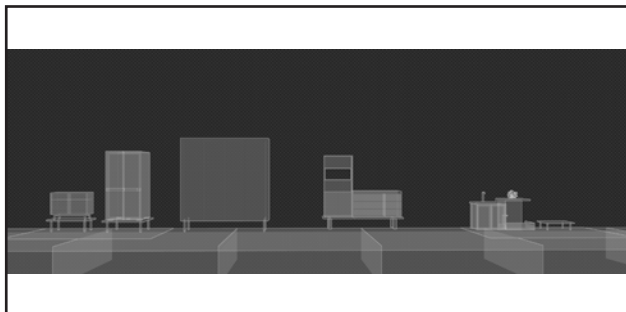

Water Features

I installed several water basins indoors that both humans and cats can use. Since cats prefer flowing water sources away from their food, this gives them the feeling of finding water in the wild.

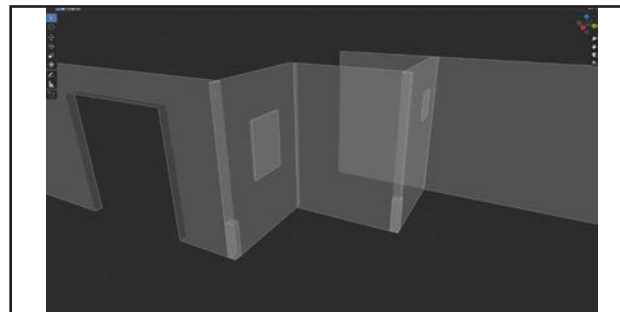

Raised all furniture (cabinets, fridge, etc.) by 15 centimeters so cats can walk underneath

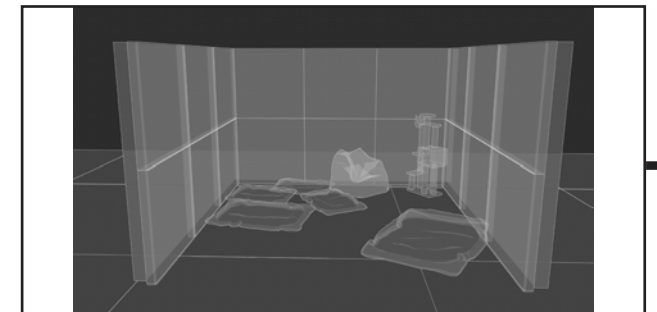

Furniture Modifications

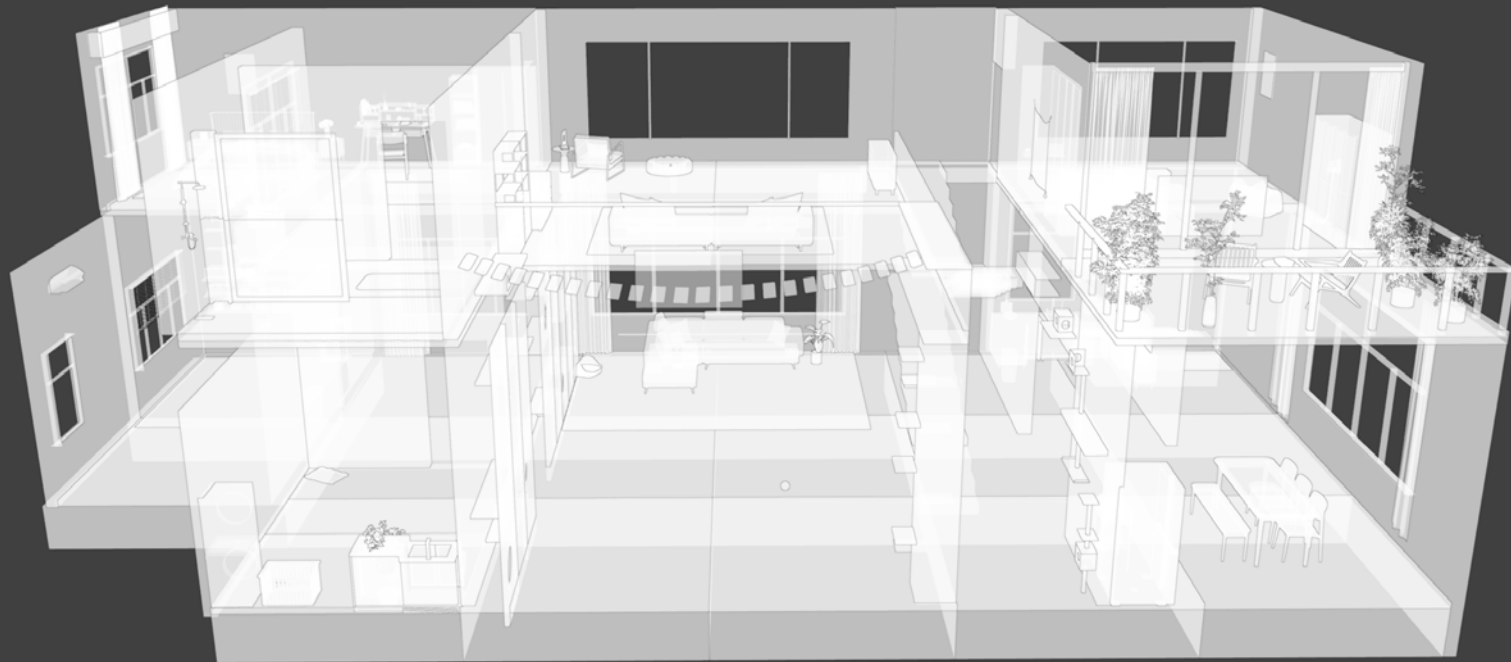

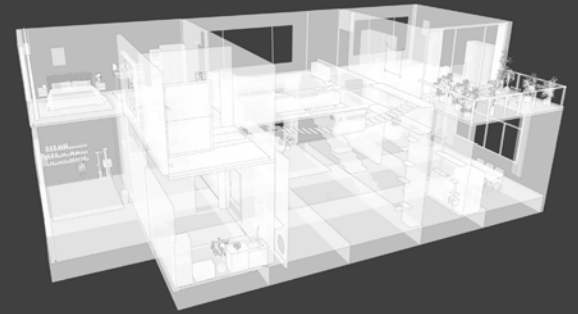

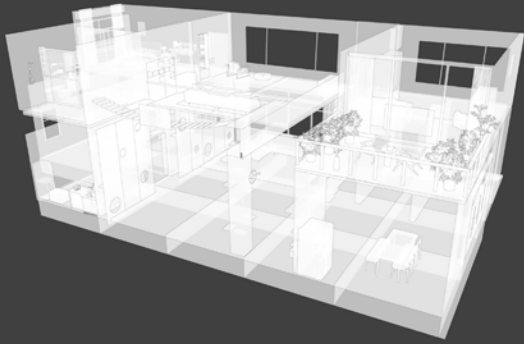

Wrapped wall corners with wool felt so cats can scratch and leave their scent

Quiet Space

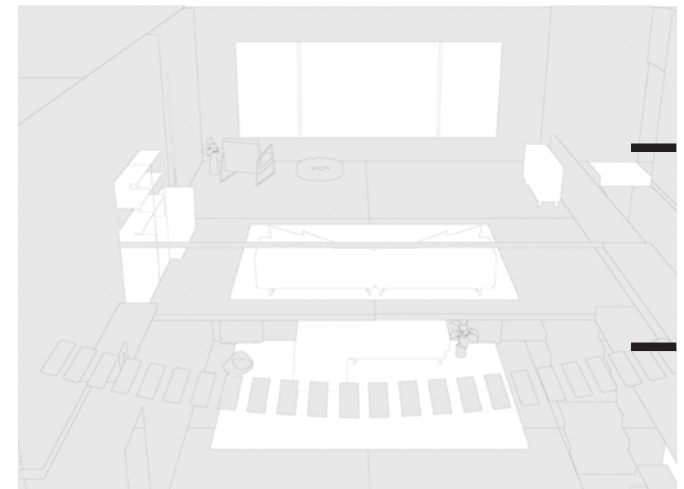

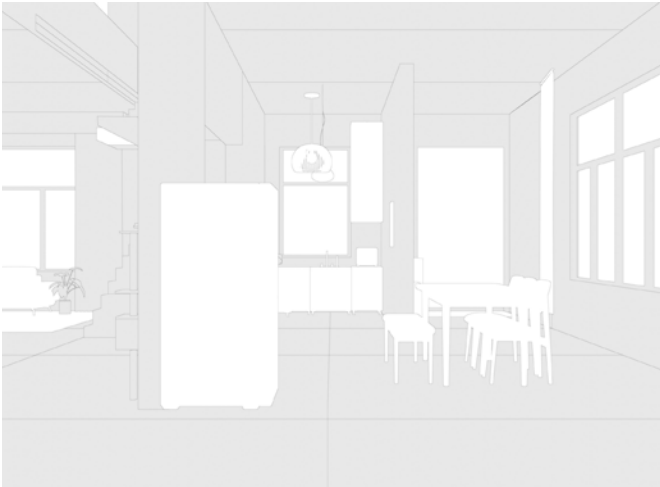

I converted the baby room into a soundproof quiet room for cats to rest.
